Arlott comments on Yorkshire's decision to play five seamers and no spinner, 'Howarth, borther of the New Zealand slow left arm bowler went on to score 80 and won the match award for its major innings... Surrey's eventual 225 from
- 55 overs was a higher total than Yorkshire have ever scored in this competition'. Arlott makes an interesting comment about Boycott, Yorkshire Captain, 'He looms too large in his fellow countrymen's minds at the moment for his own, or his colleagues' good'. The win was achieved with an air almost of condescension'. He also reports that 'No West Indian bowler sent down a bouncer... while Boyce, the most effective bowler of the [earlier Test] series was given only six overs and delivered half of them from a half-length run'. Handwritten alterations and deletions in ink Arlott's hand. G/VG £50/70

The article, written in August 1974 following the Test series against Pakistan, relates to the M.C.C. selection for the one day series against Pakistan and the impending winter tour to Australia. Arlott comments on 'The Prudential Trophy matches are being played for substantial sums of money and these are by the selectors' standards, pragmatic selections. The players themselves would resent experiment. As for the touring side, those of the past usually carried at least a couple of young players as an investment against the future. This one does

- not'. Arlott continues that 'the party has been chosen - defensibly - specifically for the purpose of winning the series in Australia... it offers a depressing prospect for the future'. Arlott describes Boycott as 'the most complete current English batsman... Underwood on a damaged wicket would win a match... Lever is bowling with improbable fire' and a 'dearth of test-quality all rounders'. Regarding the Australian team, Arlott comments, 'There is no evidence that Lillee can reproduce his former speed... Meanwhile the vaunted Thomson... has played one Test and then with little effect... Under-rated English sides of good heart have succeeded in Australia before now; this one may do as much'. Handwritten alterations and deletions in ink Arlott's hand. G/VG £60/90
- Australia regained the Ashes winning the six match series 4-1 with one match drawn, the bowling duo of Lillee and Thomson being a significant factor*
- 22 John Arlott. Arlott describes the Lord's pitch, 'After a few spurts of morning life the pitch relapsed into general torpor with a tendency to lower bounce at the nursery end'. Kanhai having won the toss for the third time in the series 'gave West Indies first innings'. He comments on bringing in 'Willis for the injured Old while West Indies left out Headley, [used] Murray in his place as opening batsman and brought in Foster'. Regarding England's bowling Arlott comments on Greig's bowling having lost accuracy and being cautioned for running on the wicket, Underwood being 'encouraged by a few balls which turned', Lloyd and Kanhai making 'batting look pleausrably simple with Kanhai making his century'. Sobers' arrival at the crease presented the bowlers with 'a more daunting prospect'. Handwritten alterations and deletions in ink Arlott's hand. G/VG £50/70

England ended the day 'with seven first innings wickets left... 564 behind'. 'Personally, I feel all this so keenly, for as perhaps you know, having had the privilege of taking part in this wonderful game of cricket, both as a professional & amateur over a considerable number of years. I always felt I have taken so much out of the game that I only hope I have, in some measure, put something back into it. Therefore whenever I feel that anyone is, in any way, lowering the high standard which the game demands I get very angry. The game, surely, was intended as a "contest" between men of guts & integrity, and wickets like the Nottingham wicket eliminate, from the very start, any idea of a "contest"'. Parsons continues to lament the game in general, describing his 'outburst' as '...how much longer will the "mob" support such so called Test matches?... £4000/6000

Cricket caps from the 1948 series are rarely seen at auction and only the caps of Don Bradman, Arthur Morris and Sidney Barnes are known by the auctioneers to be sold in the last twenty years. Bill Johnston was a key member of Bradman's Invincibles, the 1948 Australian team that toured England without losing a single match. He took 102 wickets on the Australian tour of 1948 at an average of 16.42 with a best 6-18 v Yorkshire and nine wickets in the first Test at Nottingham against England.

'Johnston was different to Miller and Lindwall. A tall left-arm bowler, he had a bouncy, bucking approach and a lithe, rubbery action which dispatched a mean late-swerving ball that often cut away sharply. Irrespective of what then happened to it, the bowler more often than not placed his hands on his hips and grinned. Picking up wickets regularly during that series, Jolly Bill Johnston offered no respite to Test or county batsmen who might have thought they were safe whenever Lindwall and Miller took their sweaters. Johnston's overall bag that summer was 102 wickets. No Australian has managed a century of wickets on a tour of England in all the years since'. [David Frith. The Guardian 2007]

He scored almost 35,000 runs at 33.26 and took over 1100 wickets at 26.42. He is famously remembered facing the West Indian fast bowlers in 1976 having been recalled to the England team at the age of 45. The interval between Close's first and last Test matches was 27 years, the second-longest after Wilfred Rhodes. Close died in September 2015 at the age of 84 years*

In the first innings I was 10 not out and in the second innings I made 101 on a very bad wicket, and against some first-class bowling. I have often remarked since, that I did not know how I managed to remain in so long on such a difficult wicket, and with such bowlers as Messrs. Spofforth, Palmer, Boyle, Giffen and Midwinter arrayed against me. I also took ten wickets* for 48 runs. The London Papers gave the following complimentary report of play:- For North of England against the Australian team, at Nottingham [1884], on a sticky wicket, Barlow was batting four hours and a half for his score of 101, and never gave the semblance of a chance; in the first innings he was 10 not out, and his bowling average was ten wickets for 48 runs. Such a performance in a match of this importance, has never been recorded, and a subscription was made and presented to him, along with a few other presents including a silver claret jug and a diamond breast pin whilst he was enthusiastically cheered'. The Australian player, Tom Horan writing in The Australasian said 'Throughout the tour we have not seen a finer performance than that of Barlow's, on such a difficult wicket, against splendid bowling, and without giving the slightest chance. His bowling also, was first class, and required a good deal of watching'.

*It is little I repair to the matches of the Southron folk,
Though my own red roses there may blow;*

*It is little I repair to the matches of the Southron folk,
Though the red roses crest the caps, I know.*

*For the field is full of shades as I near a shadowy coast,
And a ghostly batsman plays to the bowling of a ghost,
And I look through my tears on a*

As the run-stealers flicker to and fro,
To and fro:
Oh my Hornby and my Barlow long ago!*

Marriott talks of bowling in tandem with Freeman calling it 'combined operations', talks of his bowling, the amount of spin he put on the ball, his action, the flight he gave the ball and that he did not like bowling into the wind [Freeman usually got the choice of ends] 'During the summer term at Dulwich [Marriott was a master at Dulwich College] I was rarely able to turn out for Kent in more than one match.... but when I joined them at the end of July, usually for the gruelling dogfight at the Oval, Tich would give me a welcoming grin and we would get down to business. The great advantage of having both of us in the side was that we were so utterly different in style, pace and height that it was well worth keeping us on together for long spells, often right through the innings.... As we bowled over after over from opposite ends, he and I were continually playing into one another's hands. On some days we shared the wickets, on others, one of us, Tich, more often than not would be hauling in the big catch, while the other supplied covering fire by keeping the batsman pegged down, anxious, impatient and so on... - THE CRICKET COLLECTION OF ROBERT APPELEYARD, YORKSHIRE & ENGLAND 1950-1958. Part Two
- Bob Appleyard's brief first-class career which did not start until he was 27. An off spinner who bowled at close to medium pace, with a deceptive dipping flight, and great accuracy, he was devastating on a wet wicket, and economical on a batsman's pitches. His Yorkshire debut came in 1950 when he played in three matches and took 11 wickets but there was little indication of what was to happen the following season when he took 200 wickets. He took 154 wickets in 1954 and received an England call-up. He took 5 for 51 on debut, and 31 wickets at 17.87 in his nine Tests. A change in the lbw law and a chronic shoulder injury drastically reduced his effectiveness, and he quit in 1958, after only five full seasons. For Yorkshire he took 708 wickets at an average of 15.48 and a best of 8-76*

Arthur William Carr was born at Mickleham in Surrey in 1893. He was educated at Hazelwood, Eton and Sherborne Schools. The Sherborne school magazine wrote the following of his cricketing abilities in 1904 'Very good all round for his size, but too small to be much use yet' and in 1905 'For his inches would be quite in the 1st class; with a little more head, but at present is addicted to strokes that mean certain death. Is too small yet to do justice to his undoubted bowling talent. A fine field anywhere' and in 1906 'As Captain, keen and energetic in the field, but should learn to discriminate between slackness and un-skillfulness in others. As a batsman, has had no superior here, possessing every stroke a boy of his age ought to have, his driving being perhaps his strongest point. His bowling hardly increased as much in accuracy as in pace. A beautiful field anywhere, from wicket keeper outwards'. On leaving the school the magazine wrote of him: - '...has also been suddenly called to Eton. In him Hazelwood loses a sportsman second to none, and his future will be looked upon with eager interest' He went on to Eton College where he was in Mr. J.H.M. Hare's House from September 1906 to July 1907 when he was asked to leave so went instead to Sherbourne School from September 1907 to July 1911. He was a member of the Cricket XI from 1909 to 1911, scoring over 1,000 runs in the 1909 season alone. He also played for Nottinghamshire County Cricket Club 2nd XI in 1909. The Sherborne School magazine wrote the following of his 1910 cricket season 'Very good bat, with any number of good shots, his best being his drive, which is very powerful. His fault is his great recklessness, getting himself out by treating full tosses and long hops too carelessly. A good field anywhere, at his best in the slips. A useful fast bowler, but cannot last long'. In 1910 he represented the Public Schools XI in the match against the MCC at Lords. On leaving school he made his first class debut for Nottinghamshire against Derbyshire at the age of 17, in the same season, scoring 1,800 runs but did not score his first century for the club until 1913 and he played football for Leicester City [Rugby] Football Club in 1912. His war-time service saw him involved at Mons as a 2nd Lieutenant and his regiment were involved in the long retreat from Mons where they acted as a rearguard to the retreating British Expeditionary Force. He was wounded and invalided home for four months during 1915, returning to the front at the end of the year and was mentioned in despatches. Carr was named captain of England for the Ashes series against Australia in 1926. In the third Test at Leeds, he controversially put Australia into bat after winning the toss, and dropped Charlie Macartney at slip in the first over of the match. Macartney went on to score a hundred before lunch and England was lucky to avoid defeat. He came down with tonsillitis during the fourth Test of the series, and although he recovered in time for the fifth Test, he was replaced as captain by Percy Chapman. He was bitterly disappointed with this decision, and although he captained England twice more in his final two Tests against South Africa in 1929, henceforth he put most of his effort into captaining Nottinghamshire into a dominant position within the English County cricket competition. He became a test selector during the 1927 season. In 1930 and in the following years, Carr was instrumental in developing the "bodyline" bowling tactic together with future England captain Douglas Jardine and the two Nottinghamshire fast bowlers Harold Larwood and Bill Voce. Carr used the tactic of instructing his bowlers to aim at the bodies of batsmen and placing a close set field on the leg side to take catches fended away from the body with the bat and perfected it as he led Nottinghamshire to success in the county competition. Jardine then used Larwood and Voce in similar fashion on the infamous 1932-33 English tour of Australia, resulting in several injuries to Australian batsmen and the incurring the wrath of the Australian public. After this tour, and the subsequent fallout, Carr was subjected to bodyline bowling by other English county teams, and was severely shaken by several balls that nearly hit him on the head. He later denounced the tactic he had helped develop as unfair. Dissension within the Nottinghamshire club over his role in the bodyline scandal led him being sacked as captain in 1934, and he never played first-class cricket again.

In all, he played 11 times for England with a batting average of 19.75. He also wrote a book, 'Cricket with the Lid Off' with a preface by Douglas Jardine which was published in 1935. In his first class career he scored 21,100 runs including 45 centuries at an average of 31.58 and took 318 catches.

A short resume of Gilbert Court Branch and the plate's history is provided by the vendors of the plate who reside in Canada- 'Although we know the journey of the plate over the last century we do not know a great deal of history about the original owner, our great grandfather Gilbert Court Branch and his connection to W.G. Grace. Gilbert Court Branch lived in Norton Hauteville, Pensford in Somerset and was a cattle dealer and farmer. We believe he knew W.G. Grace through their joint love of beagling. Both Branch and Grace were members of the Clifton Foot Beagles. We also believe that he was a member of the Bristol Century Club.

The plates journey began when it was specially commissioned by S. J. Kepple and Son for a private dinner party at the St. Stephen's Restaurant on January 22nd, 1896 in honour of W.G.'s 100th century. The back of the plate depicts the seating arrangement with Gilbert Court sitting beside W.G. along with the other guests. The dinner was arranged by W. Methven Brownlee for all 18 guests.

Gilbert Court Branch died on December 19, 1912 at which time the plate was willed to our grandfather Harold Samuel Branch. He lived in the South Gloucestershire area for most of his life where the plate was proudly displayed in a frame in his residence until his death in 1967. After his death the plate along with other articles were shipped to Canada by our father Gilbert Peter Branch. He immigrated to Canada in the early 1950's where he married our mother and lived in southern Ontario. As children we all remember the plate being displayed in the living rooms of our homes but had little knowledge of the significance other than it was a cricket plate that belonged to our great grandfather. In 2016 we started to appraise a number of household items that belonged to our parents at which time we discovered the importance of the plate. Being Canadian we have no understanding of the game of cricket and felt it was important to return it to the birthplace of the sport where it can be appreciation for its rarity and significance.

Wear and some damage to inner lining, the cap has one small moth hole to the rear otherwise in good condition. A rare Bodyline tour cap, one of only seventeen caps issued to the players on the tour. A cap from the '1932/33. Bodyline' series must surely be the ultimate possession of any serious cricket cap collector. A rare and almost unique cap from the iconic series which caused such controversy and ill feeling with its leg theory bowling which has had long lasting repercussions on both Test and County cricket £3000/5000
- The cap was purchased by the vendor from Eddie Lawrence, cricket writer and Somerset cricket lover but originally from Yorkshire, in 2010, in the year that he died. The cap emblem and makers label have been checked against the 'Bodyline' 1932/33 cap held at Lord's museum, which was Harold Larwood's, and they are identical*

- performance of nine for 121 and completed ten wickets in a match 27 times. He scored 1,531 runs with a highest score of 43* and is one of very few major players whose career total of wickets taken exceeded his career total of runs scored. Bowes was a late selection for the tour, just three days before the ship sailed, for England's tour of Australia and New Zealand in 1932/33. He played in only the second Test on the Australian leg of the tour, at the Melbourne Cricket Ground, in which he bowled Don Bradman first ball and that was his only wicket in the match, which Australia won by 111 runs. Bowes played in the second Test against New Zealand at Eden Park in Auckland and took six for 34 on the first day to bowl New Zealand out for only 158. Bowes played in twelve first-class matches on the tour and took 37 wickets with his best performance the six for 34 in the Auckland Test.

591 'Cricket across the Sea, or, the Wanderings and Matches of the Gentlemen of Canada 1887 by two of the Vagrants'. D.W. Sanders & G.G.S. Lindsay. Toronto 1887. Beautifully bound in black quarter leather, marbled boards and gilt to top page edges, lacking the frontispiece photograph. There is a mounted signature of G.G.S. Lindsay on the reverse of a portion of the original paper wrapper, which we presume to be a copy signature, dated 'Xmas 89', window mounted into a detached page originally bound opposite the title page. The book is in good overall condition. A scarce tour book £300/400

Padwick identifies the two Vagrants as Saunders and Smith. In fact there was no Smith on the tour and he appears to have confused him with G.G.S. [Smith] Lindsey. The Canadian Eleven were mostly drawn from the Toronto Cricket Club and all were born in Canada. After victories against All New York and the Gentlemen of Ireland, the Canadians lost to the Gentlemen of Scotland. In England they experienced mixed fortunes but returned home deeply impressed by the extent to which cricket was part of national life, so much so that the banners commemorating Queen Victoria's Jubilee read fifty not out'
