- 1468 'Neville Cardus'. Original handwritten manuscript of an article on Frank Woolley by Cardus with additional corrections and additions in Cardus' hand. Cardus writes about Woolley's Test career of sixty four matches. In his typically florid style he writes, 'on a Kent v Lancashire match that one day a rush of blood might go to Woolley's head, causing him to wield his bat with all his strength and effort, whereupon the ball would be propelled beyond the county's geographical boundaries, as measured by the Ordnance Survey... he compelled me, one afternoon in the Press Box at Old Trafford to break into prose as unblushingly, as unashamedly, ornate as this:- "His cricket is compounded of soft airs and fresh flavours. The bloom of the year is not his batsmanship. And the brevity of summer is in it too'. The article may have been written for the Guardian's series of the 'Bedside Guardian'. Bound in green cloth with the bookplate of A.E. Winder who bought the manuscript from John Arlott in 1979. A unique personal record of Cardus' admiration for Frank Woolley. G/VG £300/500
