- 101 E.V. Lucas. Rare and unique manuscript handwritten by Lucas of an article titled 'The Dances' for the series 'A Wanderers Note Book', undated but probably 1930s. Written in his distinctive hand with line lengths decreasing down the page with alterations and corrections, the theme of the article relates to cricketers' use of divine intervention to improve their performances, 'I was wondering, as I watched a village game, if there is any cricketer, normally impious who has not, at one time or other, involved, to quicken the eye or invigorate his arm, heavenly aid'. Lucas refers to James Dance (writing as James Love) in his work, 'Cricket an Heroic Poem', the first publication based on a cricket match for which results exist, Kent v All England, played on 18th June 1744, in which he describes 'contestants [who] besought the interference of the Gods', quoting, 'Bryan, collected for the deadly stroke/ First cast to Heav'n a suppliant look/ Then pray'd: "Propitious Powers! Assist my Blow/ And grant the flying orb may shock the foe!'"'. A typically enjoyable example of Lucas' writing. Some rusting to page corners, otherwise in good condition £180/250

Despite these shortcomings, Lucas admires the passion for the game demonstrated by players of all ages and from all backgrounds, referring, as an example, to the 'collector, connoisseur & dilettante', the Rev. John Mitford of Suffolk, who was described by Charles Lamb as 'a pleasant layman- spoiled', and also to John Nyren, James Pycroft, Haygarth and early round arm bowling, Gaston etc. A fascinating read. Writing from Ebor House, Kingston upon Thames, Hutton is replying to a request for information about F.S. Jackson. He recollects the time he was a patient in hospital in 1942, recovering from an operation to his left arm that he broke while on a commando course. He was surprised to receive a visit from Jackson who 'spent an hour or so with me, & talked of many cricketers whom I never saw play, but I knew very much about them'. At that time Hutton felt he would never play cricket again so 'his visit did me a great deal of good, I was very low indeed at the time'. Hutton found Jackson to be charming, kind and knowledgeable, and was impressed that he had travelled from London to the hospital on the outskirts of Wakefield, 'travel was not easy in 1942'. Signed 'Len Hutton'. G/VG £50/80

- 140 Don Bradman. A fascinating collection of correspondence between Bradman and Christopher Martin-Jenkins, then editor of 'The Cricketer' magazine relating to short-pitch bowling. The first letter is a response to an editorial in the October 1984 issue of 'The Cricketer', written by Christopher Martin-Jenkins, in which the subject of intimidatory short pitched bowling was raised, including the possible introduction of measures such as increasing the length of the pitch, painting a line on the pitch, restricting the bowler's run up to ten yards, or a change in the law such that a batsman is not out caught if the ball had struck the glove or bat handle. Bradman responds to these ideas in a single page typed letter dated 3rd October 1984 to Martin-Jenkins, having read the article 'with interest...

and astonishment'. Bradman acknowledges the need to remove 'intimidation as a tactic' but lays the blame with umpires 'unwilling to exercise a moral judgement'. His view on the abolition of batsmen being out off the glove 'is an illogical and stupid way of trying to solve [the issue]', and that the idea of lengthening the pitch 'would be equally absurd, penalising batsmen of all types'. Bradman concludes by questioning whether the LBW law is adequate for spinners. 'Don't support remedies which don't make sense... I believe you are on the wrong track'. Signed 'Don'. In Martin-Jenkins' typed copy reply, dated 11th October 1984, he quotes statistical evidence supporting the concept of lengthening the pitch in proportion to the growing height of bowlers over time and increased speed through 'modern nutrition and physical training methods'. Bradman replies on the 30th October with a lengthy three page typed letter reiterating his views in strong terms on 'the foolishness of the "not out caught" idea' and that lengthening the pitch would be unfair to slow and medium paced bowlers. He uses colourful language such as 'utter fallacy', 'arrant rubbish', and is 'totally unmoved by your argument', refuting the view that modern bowlers are 'fitter, stronger and faster' and provides lengthy anecdotal evidence. He closes with a request that his views are not to be published but is happy for this letter to be shown to Jim Swanton 'and would be interested to know his reaction'. Signed 'Don'. In Martin-Jenkins' reply of 8th November he acknowledges that the change to catches off the glove 'would not be a good thing', but does not accept all of Bradman's arguments about fast bowlers, and further supports the introduction of a line across the pitch. On 28th November Bradman suggests the introduction into Test matches of a wide off a short ball, as was already the case in limited over cricket, but suggests that the 'stumbling block would be the West Indies... because they would regard "anything" as a move to blunt their fire power. Signed 'Don'. Later correspondence in 1992 relates to Bradman's agreement to the 'return to the back foot for judging a no-

- ball', and readdresses the subject of lengthening the distance between the two creases, and the supposed increase of the average height of players over time. He provides interesting evidence from a book written by W.G. Grace in 1891 in which Grace quoted the height and weight of players of his era, and lists numerous players over six foot in height, including Grace himself who was 6' at the age of sixteen. Signed 'Don Bradman'. Finally, Martin-Jenkins responds on 23rd June 1992 by thanking Bradman for his trouble, but that this 'has not altered my view that it would be desirable to at least experiment with some matches played by first-class cricketers with the stumps set a foot further back at either end and with the old back foot [no-ball] law in operation'. A fascinating insight into Bradman's opinions on the modern game. Good condition £500/700

- England won the Ashes series by four Tests to one. The tour was highly controversial because of the bodyline bowling tactics used by the England team under the captaincy of Douglas Jardine.*
- Bodyline, also known as fast leg theory bowling, was a cricketing tactic devised by the English cricket team for their 1932-33 Ashes tour of Australia, specifically to combat the extraordinary batting skill of Australia's Don Bradman. A bodyline delivery was one where the cricket ball was bowled at the body of the batsman, in the hope that when he defended himself with his bat, a resulting deflection could be caught by one of several fielders standing close by.*
- The tactic was considered by critics to be intimidatory and physically threatening, to the point of being unfair in a game that was supposed to uphold gentlemanly traditions. England's use of a tactic perceived by some as overly aggressive or even unfair ultimately threatened diplomatic relations between the two countries before the situation was calmed. Although no serious injuries arose from any short-pitched deliveries while a leg theory field was actually set, the tactic still led to considerable ill feeling between the two teams, particularly when Australian batsmen suffered actual injuries in separate incidents, which inflamed the watching crowds. The controversy eventually spilled into the diplomatic arena*

Herbert Fishwick emigrated to Australia from England when he was in his twenties. In 1910 he was employed by John Fairfax, the owner, to produce photographs for The Sydney Mail and The Sydney Morning Herald. This was just two years after the Herald first ran photographs. Herbert Fishwick revolutionised the way cricket was photographed in 1920 and thus rewrote the rules on all sports photography. He held every photographic position at the Sydney Morning Herald from cadet to picture editor between 1910 and 1939, but it was his technical genius that solved the cricket problem of short focal length lenses and the long distance from the boundary to the wicket. He designed a custom-built lens attached to a bulky Graflex plate camera and captured the action in full frame. His prints from the 1920-21 Ashes tour caused a sensation and British editors sent representatives to learn Fishwick's technique. He also pioneered the use of a revolutionary camera designed to allow colour printing in newspapers in 1937. The Sydney Mail was a weekly Australian magazine published in Sydney, the sister paper of the Sydney Morning Herald. The Sydney Mail was published from 1860-1938. It was a unique magazine and was one of the best reference points for a portrait of Australian culture in the art-deco period of the 1920's-1930's. Fishwick died at his home in Roseville, Sydney on 27 May 1957. His innovative approach to photography and constant search for better ways to tackle different assignments produced major leaps in photography in Australia and around the world. He rightly deserves to be acknowledged as the father of modern sports photography.

This photographic archive was featured and valued on the B.B.C. television programme 'Antiques Roadshow' in June 2017. Sadly the owner of the photographs has now sadly died, and his family are now offering the collection at auction in the hope that the new owner would appreciate the archive as much as he did....

Australian won the series by four tests to one, despite some excellent opening partnerships from Hobbs and Sutcliffe. Sutcliffe topped the batting averages scoring 1250 runs at 69.44 with five centuries, two of them in Tests. Tate topped the bowling averages with 77 wickets at 19.01. Hobbs and Sutcliffe were the batting stars but the rest of the team let them down and the Ashes were lost....

- George Lansbury (1859 – 1940) was a British politician and social reformer who led the Labour Party from 1932 to 1935. In 1881 seeking to improve his family's prospects, Lansbury decided that their best hopes of prosperity lay in emigrating to Australia. Contrary to the London agent's promises, there was a superfluity of labour and work was hard to come by. He worked breaking stone, as a van driver and on a farm. He went back Brisbane, and worked for a while at the newly built Brisbane cricket ground. As a keen follower of the game, he hoped to see the visiting English touring team play but, as Lansbury's biographer Raymond Postgate recorded, 'he learned that cricket watching was not a pleasure for workmen'. He returned to England in May 1885*

- Jardine himself had to face bodyline bowling in this Test match. The West Indian cricket team toured England in 1933, and, in the second Test at Old Trafford, Grant, their captain, decided to try bodyline. He had a couple of fast bowlers, Manny Martindale and Learie Constantine. Facing bodyline tactics for the first time, England first suffered, falling to 134 for 4, with Wally Hammond being hit on the chin, though he recovered to continue his innings. Then Jardine himself faced Martindale and Constantine. Jardine never flinched. He played right back to the bouncers, standing on tiptoe, and played them with a dead bat, sometimes playing the ball one handed for more control. Jardine made 127, his only Test century. In the West Indian second innings, Clark bowled bodyline back to the West Indians, taking 2 for 64. The match in the end was drawn but played a large part in turning English opinion against bodyline.*
