Cardus describes with enthusiasm how the West Indies have 'rejuvenated the game here, put new blood in it' making comparisons between the refreshing approach of Keith Boyce's bowling, 'as he releases the shining new ball he actually smiles at his own accomplishments', compared with that of Geoff Arnold, '[who] never smiles. He goes about his toil with the solemnity of an ostler in charge of a stable of selling-plater hacks'. Likewise, the West Indies' batting he describes as 'fascinating, varied, individual and original', comparing Kallicharran with Spooner and Duleepsinhji, and Clive Lloyd as the 'most dynamic, most unpredictable batsman of the century'. Cardus reminisces about great players of the past, such as Sobers, Compton, O'Reilly, Tyldesley, Woolley, Gunn etc. and provides forthright views on the current England team, comparing their approach to his plumber, 'who did his work well, but I wouldn't pay to watch him do it'. #### ALLEN HILL. YORKSHIRE & ENGLAND 1871-1882

Allen Hill 1845-1910. Yorkshire & England 1871-1882. Hill played in the first ever cricket Test, taking the first wicket and the first catch in Test History in 1877. Hill began his career with Lascelles Hall and Kirkheaton clubs and in 1863 became professional at Dewsbury and Savile, but it was with Burnley when he first played for the county in 1871. He played 139 matches for Yorkshire between 1871 and 1882. His highest score for Yorkshire was 49 versus Middlesex at Bramall Lane, Sheffield in 1876. His best bowling was 7 for 14 against Surrey at Argyle Street, in Hull in 1879.

He toured with James Lillywhite's team to Australia in 1876-1877.

Allen Hill came out on the Melbourne Cricket Ground on 15th March 1877 as England became the first International Team to field and bowl. Hill bowled the second over of the Innings conceding the first run. In the fourth over he bowled Australian opening batsman, Nat Thomson to take the honour of being the first Test bowler to take a wicket and the first Test bowler to bowl a batsman. When Australia were 40 for 1 Australia's number three batsman Tom Horan mis-hit a delivery from Alfred Shaw and Allen Hill became the first international fielder to take a catch. He was also the first player to open the batting and the bowling in the same Test, opening in the second innings. He scored 35 no in the first innings and 0 in the second. He took 1-42 from twenty three overs in the first innings and 1-18 off fourteen overs in Australia's second innings. Australia won the Test by forty five runs, thanks mainly to Charles Bannerman scoring 165 in Australia's first innings and Midwinter taking six and Kendall taking eight wickets in the match. Hill played in the 2nd Test of the 1876-1877 series. On the second day Allen joined Tom Emmett when England 162 for 6. He partnered Tom Emmett, Tom Armitage and England Captain, James Lillywhite, junior. At 259 for 8, Allen Hill was run out for 49.

Allen Hill was a bowler with an approximate round arm action, which said was 'one of the best of its kind that can be recalled'. His playing career ended in 1883, when he broke his collar-bone, but he went on to become an umpire. Hill officiated in the England v Australia 1st Test match played at Lord's in 1890

283 Allen Hill 1845-1910. Yorkshire & England 1871-1882. Selection of three items once the property of Hill. The first is a silver hallmarked vesta case with engraved with Hill's monogram 'A.H.'. Hallmarked 'Sheffield 1900. Maker 'Walker & Hall'. The vesta measures 1.25"x1.75". The second is an Edwardian oval gold coloured 'Fixeesi' double sided photograph locket c1880/90 with small photograph images of Allen Hill, to obverse a small image of Peggy McHugh, a cousin of his son James Allen, who became a notable water colour and oil artist. The locket measures 1.25"x1.5". The third item is a pair of antique Victorian brass, 9ct yellow gold fronted, cufflinks decorated with a daisy image to centre with floral surround. This type of cufflink was called solitaires and later renamed bachelor buttons. They were made by George West from 1872 in England. On the back of the cufflinks, there is a spring action mechanism allowing for the two halves of the cufflink to come away from one another, this action was patented, as indicated by the words 'West's Patent'. All in good condition. Sold with a printed copy of the listing of items from the Grandson of Allen Hill. He was left the Allen Hill items by his father. Allen Hill died on the 28th August 1910 and his son (the grandson's father) died on the 28th August 1985 £200/300

284 Allen Hill. Yorkshire & England 1871-1882. Surrey v Yorkshire 1871. Silver plated cup or trophy reportedly presented to Allen Hill by an admirer from Yorkshire, living in London following the match played at the Oval, 21st & 22nd August 1871. In the match Allen Hill took six wickets for thirty three runs off 26.3 overs in Surrey's first innings and six wickets for twenty four runs from twenty three overs, giving Hill overall match figures of twelve wickets for fifty seven runs. The goblet/trophy stands 7.5" tall and has oak leaf, floral and cartouche decoration to the cup and the base. There is no inscription on the trophy. Some loss to silver plate otherwise in good condition. Sold with a printed copy of the listing of items from the Grandson of Allen Hill. He was left the Allen Hill items by his father. The match was played at Hagley Park, Christchurch on the 26th to 28th February 1877 and Lillywhite's XI won by 23 runs. Allen Hill was top scorer in the match, batting at number ten in the order he made 23 runs in a low scoring match. The next highest scorer was Alfred Shaw with 22. Hill did'nt bowl in the first innings but when he bowled in the second innings he took twelve wickets for seventeen runs bowling 25.3 overs. Ten of the wickets were clean bowled

286 Allen Hill. Yorkshire & England 1871-1882. All England Eleven travelling in New Zealand 1877. Original oil painting of the All England Eleven attempting to transverse an engorged river whilst travelling to Christchurch for their tour match with Canterbury in February 1877. The painting by artist John Gibb, a notable painter of landscapes, marine subjects, steam and sailing vessels. The image shows the second of the two horse drawn stage coaches becoming submerged with players and horses in the water to foreground, the first coach and rescuers appear to be on the far bank. Magnificent mountains, hills and woodland to background. The painting measures 18.25"x12" and is loosely mounted in its original frame without glass. Signed to lower left hand corner, which appears to say, 'John Gibb, N.Z. 1877'. Original label to back of the painting for 'Mr John Gibb, Artist. Merkland Villa, Barbados Street, Christchurch. Painter of Landscapes, Marine Subjects, Portraits of Steam and Sailing Vessels....'. Some wear to edges, some wear and slight damage to image otherwise in good condition. A rare portrait from this early cricket tour £3000/5000

'We travelled through the deep gorge in heavy floods, our two coaches were all but submerged. 'I think we all said our prayers'. Words of Allen Hill

'And there was the travel, which continued to be long and arduous. Particularly memorable was the journey from Greymouth on the west coast of New Zealand's south island to Christchurch in the east, which started in two stagecoaches. They were due to spend the night in Otira, high in the Southern alps, but they were still not there at 11pm when, in heavy rain, they were forced to cross a river that had burst its banks. All safely reached an island in the middle of the stream, which was where their lights blew out. The first coach reached the far side of the river, but the second got stuck.' All had to jump for their lives into the stream, which was now up to their waists, the player wrote. 'By great exertion the coach was got out, but only just in time, as soon huge stones, trees and logs began to be carried down the swollen river'

The soggy players dragged their sodden luggage the remaining half-mile to their hotel, where they discovered there were only three beds for their party of 17. Happily the couple who owned the hotel were able to lend them some clothes while their own dried out, though less happily that did involve some players being forced to put on dresses.

Words of an unnamed player in a series of letters to the Sporting Life. Reproduced in the Guardian Newspaper in January 2020

John H. Gibb (1831-1909) was a Scottish, marine painter who settled in New Zealand in 1876. Gibb was a founding member of the Canterbury Society of Arts when it was formed in 1880 and continued to exhibit his many works there until his death. He exhibited wherever possible and showed works in Auckland and Wellington from the early 1880s as well as sending works to many international and inter-colonial exhibitions beyond New Zealand. By the 1880s Gibb was regarded as New Zealand's major professional marine painter. Around 1880 he moved to Australia where he became a member of the Art Society of New South Wales in Sydney. The family returned to New Zealand by 1892. The highest price recorded for the artist for a single work was $85,000

Daniel King was known to his contemporaries as 'the great cricketer' but it is likely that his exploits on the cricket field would have been long forgotten but for the chance survival of this portrait painted around 1835 and a pocket handkerchief. The handkerchief depicts an adaptation of Hayman's painting 'Cricket in Marylebone Fields and surrounded by the 1744 Laws of the Game. On the back of the frame is a newspaper cutting dated 1869 refers to having seen an old silk handkerchief given by Daniel King to Mr J. Humphrey of Donnington near Chichester in Sussex on his deathbed. The handkerchief was presented to Sussex County Cricket Club at Hove by Mrs Elizabeth Humphrey of Chichester. Daniel King was born in 1784 and first appeared in the local papers as a cricketer of note in 1814. Local newspapers continued to record his prowess and King first appeared in 'Scores & Biographies' in 1822 when he was top scorer for Goodwood, Boxgrove and Hampnett versus Midhurst at Goodwood Park. After a ten year gap he re-appeared in Scores & Biographies' in 1834 at the age of fifty, opening the batting with the Earl of March for Goodwood versus Duncton again at Goodwood Park. He died in 1836 aged 53 and the gentlemen of Chichester, having a short time since, entered into a subscription for the purpose of having his portrait painted, and presenting it to him as a mark of respect. Mr Lush was employed to paint the picture. It is believed that the painting was planned to be presented in the week of his death. The melancholy task was doubtless performed and the widow posses the relic of her lamented partner. John Lush's diary reveals that he was a cricket enthusiast and had almost certainly watched Daniel King play. John Lush painted the original portrait of Daniel King some time in 1835 or 1836. The lithograph of the painting was made by Sharp of Gerard Street, Soho, London soon after. This lithograph appears to be a proof copy, 'Proof' printed to the right hand border to the right of the title

Lipschitz of Hamburg of a match in the Brighton Ground. Later states of which at least three exist, bear the names of both the lithographer and of the London publishers. The picture is based on and closely resembles an engraving published in February 1849 by W.H. Mason, engraved by G.H. Phillips from a picture executed by W. Drummond with some assistance from C.J. Basebe. The original painting commenced in 1843 took five years to complete, and it is not surprising to find that in that interval before publication six of the characters had died, and the players changed so that the personae dramatis do not agree with any*

The Australian Services XI was a cricket team comprising solely military service personnel during World War II. They became active in May 1945 after the defeat of Germany. The team played matches against English cricket sides of both military and civilian origins to celebrate the end of the war. These matches were aimed at increasing morale in the war-ravaged English cities and as a means of reviving cricket after the conclusion of fighting. The end of the war marked the start of the 1945 cricket season. Plum Warner organised a series of matches between England and Australian servicemen, known as the Victory Tests, to celebrate the end of hostilities. However, Australian cricket administrators would not accredit the three-day matches as official Test matches, arguing that there were not enough Test-level players in the armed services; Lindsay Hassett was the only Australian who had Test experience

Cyril Price, also known under the pen names of 'Gwynne', 'Kim' and 'Spike', was a Welsh artist, an ex-miner who, when the mines closed, began contributing drawings to the Bristol Evening World. From the 1930s he was a front page and interior artist for the comic weeklies of the Amalgamated Press and worked on titles such as Illustrated Chips (Private Potts 1934), Comic Cuts (Quip and Cranky 1934), Joker (Bert and Daisy 1937), Jolly (1938) and Butterfly (The Jolly Days 1939). Later he worked for the Daily Graphic and his work for this was collected together for The Whisker's Annual. From 1944, the Daily Sketch published Price's political cartoons, who signed them Kim
